Introduction

BY

International Federation of Library Associations)*

In the last edition of this Yearbook, published in 1948, I wrote "We are experiencing a general and swift improvement in many aspects of our work. Things are really moving. But will they continue to improve? Will progress be in the right direction? Or are we just enjoying a brief Indian summer with the cold winds of winter waiting round the corner?"

The answers to those questions are largely to be found in the following pages. They are, if we consider the position as a whole, that library services have continued to improve, that progress has been in the right direction, and that we have not encountered the winter of our discontent and seem less likely than ever to do so. There are, in certain fields, exceptions to this general statement, and some will shortly be noted, but in the majority of the various departments of library and of museums and art gallery, activity, remarkable improvement, expansion and consolidation has been achieved. I am not competent to speak of museums and art galleries, but never before have libraries been so important as they are now and though this importance is still far from adequately appreciated in many quarters, never before have they enjoyed such support and recognition.

To consider Great Britain first. Our public libraries are doing more extensive and better work, with more books and better qualified staff. Statistics do not adequately indicate this progress. For example, rising costs vitiate comparison of financial factors. Again, the general tendency towards the provision and the use of a higher proportion of more worthwhile books has limited the purely quantitative increase in issues. Allowing for such factors, however, the comparison is interesting. In the year 1946-7 the national average expenditure per head of total population was 2s. 18½d., in 1953-4 it was 4s. 5d. Of this 70½d. was in 1946-7 spent on books, whereas last year book expenditure was 1s. 2½d. per head. Lending library issues per head of total population were 6.13 and had risen to 7.34 last year. The difference between the service that was just finding its feet after the war and the service of to-day is not, however, assessable in terms of figures. More libraries are catering more adequately for people who have things to do and things to interest them—often, not unjustifiably, at the expense of the more ephemeral. More often those who find library services of value to them are being satisfied. There is closer co-operation both between public libraries themselves and with other types of library. Reference services though still not adequate - have improved. We certainly have better personnel, for not only are there more chartered librarians, there are also many more graduates in library work. And, on the whole, we are discovering and applying a clearer conception of the purpose and opportunities of public libraries, becoming better rooted in the societies we have to serve. I myself believe that in the next decades public librarians will become increasingly more concerned with the active and active-minded people, will do much to increase their numbers, will realise that to obtain these objectives they will need to improve the organisation and status of their libraries. Therefore, I am very happy to see the way things are tending - but sorry that the rate of change is still too slow.

This book discloses some of the things that have been done, but it shows also some of the still prevailing limitations. It shows, for example, that there are still a surprising number of very small, independent systems, notably in Scotland. There is a remarkable difference in expenditure between municipal and county libraries. Above all, there are grave differences between standards of service in similar towns and counties, and great variations in the proportions of expenditure on books and staff in relation to total expenditure. There are even, as can be seen, most curious variations in such matters as hours of opening. Opinion may differ as to how these manifest deficiencies may be remedied. Many of us had hopes -and some of us still have hopes - that a Public Libraries Department of the Central Government would be established to encourage, help, and co-ordinate the growth of a well organised, truly adequate nation-wide public library service, but these hopes have not materialised yet. Neither has there been that large scale reorganisation of local government areas and functions which might have been useful. However, just as we are wise never to lose sight of our defects and limitations, so is it sensible for us not to forget that in spite of what remains to be done, the British public library service is as good as that of any other nations in the world, with two possible exceptions.

Other types of libraries also show great progress during these last six or seven years. Our national and university libraries have undergone substantial development and consolidation. Special libraries and information bureaux in rich variety of field, scope and method of provision, many of relatively recent origin, exist and, with few exceptions they have improved their resources and their methods, have initiated closer co-operation and improved their staffing. A much higher proportion of these -including the libraries of government departments - are now employing qualified chartered librarians. Everywhere there is a lively interest in the techniques of librarianship and documentation which augurs well. Occasionally one hears it suggested that librarians can be too interested in techniques but this is a mistake. It is not, of course, sufficient to be interested in how to do, for it is necessary to think first of what one seeks to do. The plain truth, however, is that the keenest 'technicians' are precisely those who, appreciating more clearly their immense opportunities, are seeking means to seize them efficiently, economically and directly.

The greatest developments in the special library field have been in the realms of science and technology not surprisingly, because the future of the country depends upon the growth and, above all, the fullest possible utilisation of scientific and technological knowledge. It is thus encouraging to find that the government is fully alive to the importance of library services in this work as is evidenced by the preparation of a scheme for a great national library of science and technology based on the Patent Office Library, and by the activities of the Library Advisory Committee which is working under the Lord President of the Council. Nevertheless, it is important that this concentration on the material should not prevent our seeking to secure equally good library services for the humanities.

To round off this brief survey the Library Association, the membership of which has increased from 7,706 when the 1948 edition of this Yearbook was prepared, to 11,836 this year, is still, whatever its critics may say, a very active body with innumerable activities and points of contact. And since the last edition appeared the British National Bibliography, a very fine production indeed, has been established and flourishes.

This Yearbook also embraces, though necessarily in much less detail, particulars of libraries in other countries. What of the wider field of library development? Viewing the world as a whole, it seems certain that no six years have ever before seen so much achievement. It has been very unequal, of course, but the obstacles in the path of library development in some countries are serious and difficult to surmount; in only a few have those sound foundations yet been laid upon which good nation-wide systems can exist and consolidate their forces.

In the United States serious thought has been devoted to the promotion of more effective units of administration--county and regional --to the place of libraries in the present-day world (note, particularly, the Public Library Enquiry), and to securing provision for the millions as yet without service. In Denmark and Sweden, already at the beginning of this period well ahead of most other countries, improvements in bibliographical services, in the closer union of all types of libraries and in government support are to be noted, while there is similar activity in Norway. In Finland, efforts to improve state support have not been realised but there is steady improvement. In Western Germany the public library is securing more adequate recognition and much is being done to modernise and extend services ; open access is becoming less uncommon. The erection last year of the American Memorial Library in Berlin should exercise considerable influence. In France there is still much leeway to be made up but a good beginning has been made in the establishment of regional services in certain Departments. Developments are still tentative and modest in Spain and Italy. Holland and Belgium still suffer from a multiplicity of over-small libraries, and as before the prevailing inadequacy is thrown into sharper relief by the few excellent libraries which are working on sound modern lines. In Switzerland, despite a very varied pattern, arising from the traditional independence of the cantons and the multi-lingual population, the overall service is distinguished by the good work of the Bibliothèques pour Tous organisation, the notable contribution of the National Library and the example of certain progressive city services. In Yugoslavia public libraries are still in their infancy ; there is a tendency towards too many unrelated service points ; but the need is recognised. Of work behind the Iron Curtain we know too little to pass judgement.

Further afield, in Turkey and Greece, the first steps towards establishing modern public libraries have been taken. Further away in India, the Delhi Unesco Pilot Library should act as a beacon, though an immense task faces the librarians of that country, and in Japan and the Philippines widespread library provision exists, though it still lacks adequate support. In South America the 1951 Unesco Seminar has stimulated interest and given practical guidance, and has been followed by a further pilot project at Medellin, Colombia.

As regards the Dominions : In New Zealand, which has surely the best library service outside Northern Europe and the United States, the trend towards the provision of genuinely free, municipally supported libraries has continued, promoted by the excellent work of the National Library Service. In Australia outstanding developments have taken place. Encouraged and supported by well-directed state library boards, an ever increasing number of local authorities have established public libraries –and existing authorities have much improved their provisions –in New South Wales, Victoria, Tasmania, and Queensland, and a bold original plan for development in the vast territories of Western Australia has recently been adopted and work is beginning. In South Australia the state library continues to improve its services for the capital and for the outlying districts. On the whole, Australia is well on the way to achieving a nation-wide system in the next decade or so. In Canada, development is unequal and conditions in, say, British Columbia and Toronto are still well ahead of those in some other provinces and cities, while in South Africa much the same may be said as there, also, there are outstanding libraries, and also other cities with little better than subscription institutions and many large unprovided districts. But in both countries the work is well in hand, the need is understood—and it is largely a question of time.

It must, alas, be said that most of our Colonies still lack proper public library provision. Outstanding achievements are the development of library services in Jamaica and in the Eastern Caribbean—both well planned but not sufficiently supported—in the Gold Coast and in East Africa. The difficulties are great and arise from many causes—the low incidence of literacy in some territories, poverty and bad social conditions, and the grave shortage of literature in the vernacular, among them. Nevertheless, not only have we a clear responsibility to ensure that the peoples of our colonies shall have the means of self education and social and economic development; it is in our own interest to secure that they shall attain adequate standards of living and become good, well informed citizens. Apart from anything else, the prestige of the British peoples in the eyes of the world at large depends largely upon how we accept this duty and demonstrate our genuine belief in the four freedoms and the principles of democratic life. As I see it, in most of our colonies, education and library services cannot and will not be established and maintained solely by local initiative and support. This initiative and support must be provided, at least for a while, by our own government. Apart from the public library services in the colonies, special reference must be made to provision for higher education, such as the new Technical College Library at Nairobi, the University Library at Achimote, the University College of the West Indies, etc.

Four factors are, in my view, chiefly responsible for this changing face of library provision which is evident increasingly throughout the world. The first is surely the most important, for it is the urge from within arising from economic pressure, from the emergence among the ordinary people of a desire for educational and social progress and individual freedom, and from the staunch, unrelenting efforts of the noble army of librarians, often alas far too few, always faced with discouragements and limitations, but seldom lacking in faith and a sense of their special responsibilities in the world of to-day.

The other factors are, as it were, external. And it would be idle to pretend that without the internal urge they could be very effective, because their role is that of encouraging, demonstrating, and uniting those concerned each in his own country. These factors are UNESCO, IFLA and the British Council.

UNESCO, by 'means of its propaganda for education and libraries, its seminars and publications, its expert technical assistance, its pilot projects and its many endeavours to facilitate the dissemination of books and to improve bibliographical services has been a major force, gradually making the nations 'library conscious' and demonstrating both needs and methods. Its work in the library field, though carried out with very modest resources, will if steadfastly pursued, do much to develop the undeveloped territories which as yet cover the major part of the world's surface and to remove the stigma that as yet most of the world's inhabitants cannot read, with all the tragedy, slavery, poverty and disease that illiteracy involves. Let it be remembered that all 'literacy campaigns' and, indeed, all education at all times for all ages, will fail to bring results if no library services are available.

IFLA (the International Federation of Library Associations) has—like its companion organisation, FID (the International Federation of Documentation)—so far been most active in the more developed countries and in the fields of learning and specialisation. But it has promoted international understanding and international co-operation—and, moreover, even in the 'developed countries' much remains to be done in the development of library services.

The British Council, despite its limited objectives of demonstrating the British way of life, of encouraging interest in things British and of providing information about them, has served a wider purpose as regards libraries. This is because the establishment of libraries has been one of its major methods of operation—and the fact remains that in some of the countries where these libraries have been set up they have been the only libraries to exist at all akin to public libraries. The same applies to the libraries of the United States Information Service. Thus, they have been more than British or American libraries; they have been demonstrations, perhaps on an over small scale, of the kind of library service that the people of Great Britain—and of America—have normally enjoyed for a great many years, and they must have made many people in their 'host' countries wish that they too had their own public library systems—and they have shown how such institutions can be organised and provided. The tragedy has been that too few at home have understood how valuable and important these libraries could be, both in promoting our national interest and in helping these 'host' countries.

Thus the libraries have been under supported and understaffed. There have been, especially, too few qualified British librarians employed—and the number is to-day fewer than ever. It stands to reason that any library which is to deal with British materials and to demonstrate British ideals and methods must be in charge of a qualified British librarian—and every library must be good of its kind. Therefore, there is nothing better that we can do, at less expense, both to further our own interests and to help others, than at once to strengthen these invaluable institutions. It is the duty of everyone interested in library provision to use his influence to overcome this apathy and lack of understanding.

II

This edition of the Libraries Museums and Art Galleries Year Book differs from its predecessors in several important respects. Firstly, as regards the British section, the information is based on replies to a new questionnaire. In drafting this the editor sought to eliminate things of little practical significance and matters which could be taken for granted (such as open access). He gave preference to four main types of data : (a) those which would help people to use and communicate with the institutions—full addresses, names of personnel, hours of opening, etc. ; (b) those which would as far as possible disclose their extent and standards—such as financial factors, the extent of periodical holdings, the extent and quality of staffing, etc. ; (c) details of the specialised holdings, for one of the great needs of the present is to know where material on this or that subject may be found, and (d) information about the various new, original, different and experimental activities of libraries.

Secondly, because the entries are on the whole much more detailed than before, we have abandoned the separate statistical tables regarding public libraries—partly to save space and partly because the statistics published by the Library Association meet the need for such tables.

Thirdly, we have endeavoured to give longer and better lists of the important libraries in other countries and to embrace as many countries as possible.

No one can be more aware of the defects and deficiencies of this publication than those who have been responsible for compiling it. For some of these we accept responsibility. Reasonable care has been taken, in transcribing the information, in proof reading and the like, to avoid error, but any further attempt to check and re-check would have much delayed publication and thus diminished the value of the work. For others we are not to blame. We could only utilise the information that was provided. The vast majority of librarians have been most helpful and co-operative and we would give them our sincere thanks for all the trouble they have taken. But a few librarians have occasionally either misunderstood questions or answered queries of their own invention—and it has not always been quite clear what they intended to say. And some librarians, despite repeated reminders, have neglected to answer the questions at all.

The information about libraries in other countries has been supplied by a wide variety of correspondents, by library associations, by friends and 'contacts', by embassies, etc., and we gratefully record our appreciation of their assistance. Many supplied far more detail than we could use, and to these we offer our apologies. The full detailed lists will, however, be deposited in the Library Association's Library where the data will be incorporated with the vast assemblage of information already there. Therefore, any who seek further facts will often be able to obtain them on application to the Association's well informed librarian, Mr. D. C. Henrik Jones. Conversely in other cases the national lists were more brief than we would have wished—though it would have been difficult and invidious for us to amplify them from other sources. Moreover, from some countries, despite repeated requests, sometimes to several possible informants, it has not been possible to get any lists at all. Thus, some countries are unfortunately missing; in other cases we have adopted the admittedly unsatisfactory course of reprinting the previous lists.

Finally, as regards the indexes, which we believe will add considerably to the utility of the Yearbook: Special collections of any importance are listed but not where the existence of a special collection in a particular library could be taken for granted. For example, the fact that Essex County Library has an Essex collection is not noted, but we do index the Essex collection at Walthamstow. Similarly, 'general' collections are not indexed. For example, many public libraries have 'general' music collections and these are not indexed, but special music departments are listed and so are collections dealing with special aspects of music. The indexes also include the names of bequests and collections where these are memorable (e.g. the Gladstone Collection of 19th century pamphlets at the National Library of Wales) and the special names of libraries, art galleries and museums (e.g. Hornby Art Library at Liverpool).

Professional Training

Full-time Schools of Librarianship giving a course of one academic year in preparation for the Registration examination are established in Technical or Commercial Colleges at Birmingham, Brighton, Glasgow, Ealing, Leeds, London, Loughborough, Manchester and Newcastle. Entry is available to graduates or persons who have passed the Library Association Entrance Examination. Courses for the Final examination are also available at certain schools for those who have completed the Registration examination.

Correspondence courses, part-time lectures, summer and weekend schools are also held in preparation for the examinations of the Library Association. The latter are held in Summer and Winter at convenient centres in the British Isles and also overseas.

An alternative method of qualification available to honours graduates is provided by the post-graduate Diploma course of the London School of Librarianship and Archives, University College, London.

The Regulations and Syllabus of Professional Examinations together with all examination papers for the previous year and full details of training facilities are published in the Students' Handbook obtainable from the Secretary of the Library Association (price—three shillings and sixpence, including postage). Further information, including Bye-Laws, List of Members, List of library and bibliographical associations throughout the world, etc., is contained in The Library Association Year Book (price—twenty-one shillings; to members, fifteen, including postage).

JAMES COOK—MURDERER

Says Bob the Binder

“Horrible thought—the last man they hanged in these irons was a bookbinder. Hit a customer over the head with a press pin and then burnt his body. I shan’t forget my visit to the Guildhall Museum at Leicester in a hurry.

You get better treatment from Bookbinders to-day. And I’ll tell you something. If you order your books to be bound in Linson they’ll respect you for being ‘in the know.’ And don’t forget the thicker grade called ‘Library Linson’ is for the extra heavy ones.”

Museums in Britain

W. E. SWINTON, PH.D., F.R.S.E., F.M.A.,
Honorary Editor, The Museums Journal.

The position of Museums in this country is complicated and contradictory. It is not capable of statistical analysis in the way that the Library service is, and thus is a little difficult for even the museum enthusiast to unravel. On the one hand, we have here a collection of National Museums among the foremost of their individual kinds and, as a series, of unsurpassed worth and achievement. We have in the universities, not only the oldest museum in the country, the 17th century Ashmolean, but several of an order of merit that enables them to compete with any in any other part of the world.

On the other hand, we have a great number of municipal museums such as are without parallel elsewhere. In all, there are still over 600 active museums in this country, and the loss of several that did not survive the war, or whose activating spirits have deserted them since, is not seriously felt. On the whole then, in national taxation and in municipal rates, museums extract a great deal of money from the citizen. What does he get in return ?

He has now become well established as the patron of the arts and sciences. Anciently the church was cast in this role and was succeeded, and with some success, by the wealthy and the powerful who were required in one way or another many of the things we now treasure in our collections. How far the average citizen enters into his inheritance is not very clear, though it is likely that in the future the recognition and the use of these will be much greater. This is because the use of museums by schools has vastly increased since the war. It is true that for many years some museums have prepared whole series of transportable objects for circulation in the schools. This is now a world-wide practice, though we should not forget that it originated here. In these last years this service has been enormously increased not only in the number of objects so used but in the number of services and the number of museums who are interested. Parallel with this, and of even greater ultimate importance, are the arrangements so generally made for school children to come to the museum, there also to see objects but to see them in more natural surroundings than can usually be contrived in the all too familiar class room.

The success of these schemes depends not only on the resources of the museum and its staff, but obviously on the co-operation and financial generosity of the education authority. This is not often lacking, though there are all too familiar reasons for its restriction, and at least one advanced authority organizes a Museum Service without a museum, though it has a considerable and efficient department that arranges for the building of special collections for the schools.

This school-museum co-operation is of particular importance, not only because of the great body of museum conditioned citizens that there will be in the future but because so much of the relationship is fostered and stimulated, if not altogether inaugurated, by the British Broadcasting Corporation. The Schools Broadcasting Council has long been aware of the great supply of three dimensional educational material housed in museums, and several of the regular series of broadcasts have been illustrated by museum specimens in the pamphlets circulated to schools and special illustrative exhibitions have been prepared by museums, as follow up procedure for the schools. This has been most valuable co-operation but the coming of a school television service, though not expected in action for about two years, should none the less have the educational and museum authorities wondering now about the remarkable opportunity thus afforded of making every child, however remote their home may be, familiar with the great stories of the ages and with that mastery of the arts, crafts and the sciences which we are sometimes apt to forget has been among the great products of our own recent history.

But museums are not all for schools, and one must not forget the stimulus afforded to the older generations by radio programmes of one kind or another, and by some very familiar television series. All of these may be said to combine entertainment and education and if they succeed in making even a few viewers and listeners aware of the local richness as evinced by the museum, so much the better for the community. This can be maintained for surely the museum, if it is successful at all, does reflect the character, the history and the possibilities, physical as well as cultural, of the place in which it is set.

There can be little practical doubt of this, so that the province of museums needs recalculation in many cases. Gone are the days when local enthusiasm and a small band of amateurs could establish a museum of general range. Many such institutions did good work but the recession of interest and the death of the honorary curators left the buildings and societies open to the dumping of unrelated and unsuitable objects, many of them unwanted by anyone, but none the less hard to refuse. Some of these relict museums, of no local value and with little of intrinsic interest, still poison the museum climate of opinion. The Museums Association, with the generous assistance of the Carnegie United Kingdom Trust, has done much in the last decade to minimise this baneful effect and to transform some of those eyesores into real and living adjuncts to town and village life.

But curatorship is not a general human attribute ; the countless materials of the museum need the skilled attention of scientist, scholar and craftsman, and obviously few localities can be freely endowed with any or all of these specialists who can give of their time and knowledge. Thus in this sphere, if in few others, the attention of Big Brother is desirable, with a scheme of regionalization where the well-equipped and specialist-staffed museum of a large city or county centre is enabled to advise the less happily placed and smaller museums of the province. Indeed, one has to admit that a scheme of nationalization, such as exists in France, would not only ensure the redemption of all small museums, but would solve innumerable problems of staffing and training, and assure the museums, absorption in the national educational scheme.

This cannot be too strongly stressed. Every day we become more aware of the visual consciousness of the public, of the advantages of the solid object allied to the academic approach, since it is the function of good museums to try to recapture the environment of objects, whether the flower or the animal, or the picture seen to advantage in the proper setting, or the charm of the period room.

This awakening of a sense of time and place sees the creation of a number of period homes and folk museums, where not only the rural delights are recreated in the proper atmosphere, but the architectural charms of the country house are used as the setting for the vanishing remnants of our cultural heritage. These words are not exaggerations. It is an axiom of biology that all data are vanishing data and in the period room one only seeks to preserve something of the human ecology of a past that had certainly its scars but was not without its glories.

Museum problems are, however, not all of collections or of mansions in which to place them. There are countless questions of recruitment, education and, above all, of the appreciation of professional men and women. Thanks to the Diploma of the Museums Association, its Fellowships and Associateships, its related training courses and examinations, there is now a more readily available yardstick for employment and remuneration than has ever been before and one, happily, that has been found acceptable by many local authorities. Naturally anomalies remain, the criteria for salary assessment for museum officers may be hard to determine. Practice shows that there can be good museums in small localities, where there is scholarship with and without showmanship, and even in the absence of high attendance figures. Thus, population figures, rateable values, academic qualifications, age and history of the collections, may all mean much or very little. Yet on the solution of such problems depends, as in our sister service of the libraries, the future status of the service because of the effect of such things on the attraction and intake of trainee curators.

Indeed, many of our problems are those of specialist librarians and we do not forget the enthusiasm and the good museum service of many librarian-curators, sharers in a joint, if sometimes dubious, service. And the librarians may for their part, remember that the Director of the world's greatest museum, the British Museum, is also titled Principal Librarian.

Fortunately for the professionals, as well as for the great public that maintains and uses the services, there has long been mutual respect and valuable, and indeed close, co-operation between the Library Association and the Museums Association. Speaking personally, I feel that so long as such co-operation is ensured, so long as both of us face frankly and with courage the many problems that face the world's greatest free educational service—which is really what we jointly provide—so much the better for all parties on both sides of the house and on both sides of the counter.

Training for Museums

Unlike most other professions there are no facilities in universities or technical colleges for a specific training in museum work. There is, of course, provision at the universities for training in the subjects with which museums and art galleries are concerned but a candidate for training in museum practice must enter a museum and learn by apprenticeship.

After entrants have been in full-time employment in a museum for at least six months, and provided that their education qualifies them for admission to a full degree course at a British university, they may register with the Museums Association as students for the Diploma.

The Association is primarily an examining and not a teaching body, and students follow a curriculum of training in the museum in which they are employed, supplemented by private study and attendance at three of the Association's Demonstration Courses. Non-graduates take Part I of the Examination after two years and Part II the following year ; graduates take a combined examination after two years study. Holders of the Diploma, which is awarded as a result of these examinations, may take up Associateship and may later be elected Fellows of the Association.

The Association also awards a Technical Certificate, after examination, for museum workers who have achieved a recognized standard of technical knowledge and practical ability in one or more branches of museum work. In connection with this, a scheme for training in taxidermy has been evolved, by which candidates can train for three months in the British Museum (Natural History) or in the Royal Scottish Museum.

SCIENCE MUSEUM, South Kensington, London, S.W. 7. Open weekdays 10 to 6, Sundays 2.30 to 6. Closed Christmas Day and Good Friday. Admission Free. (For Library, see below.)

GENERAL DESCRIPTION : The Science Museum is the National Museum of Science and Industry. The collections from which the present ones originated were first brought together as part of the South Kensington Museum, which was formally opened in 1857 as a section of the Science and Art Department (first of the Board of Trade, later of the Privy Council) which had been set up in 1853. In 1884 the collections were notably strengthened by the inclusion of the contents of the Patent Office Museum ; and in 1909 the Science and the Art Collections became separate entities, as the Science Museum and the Victoria and Albert Museum respectively, administered by the Board (now Ministry) of Education. The present Eastern Block of the buildings, fronting in Exhibition Road, was formally opened in 1928 ; the old centre and western blocks, long scheduled for replacement, remained in service until the outbreak of the Second World War, but at its conclusion had so far deteriorated as to be of no further use. The Ground Floor of a new Centre Block has been completed and will be available shortly for exhibition purposes. Scope and Collections : The collections of the Science Museum illustrate the application of science to industry, and the development of scientific and industrial instruments, apparatus and machinery, and are arranged in seven departments, the Science Library forming a further separate department of the Museum. Department 1—Physics : magnetic, electrical (including electronic), acoustical, thermal and optical instruments and phenomena ; atomic physics ; vacuum pumps and technique ; time measurement ; and apparatus comprising the collections of H.M. George III and Lord Rayleigh. Department 2—Chemistry and Photography : pure, analytical and applied chemistry ; photography and cinematography ; structure of matter ; metallurgy ; glass technology. Department 3—Transport and Mining : road and rail transport ; steam and motor ships ; marine engines and boilers ; mining and ore dressing. Department 4—Electrical Engineering and Communications : heavy current electrical engineering ; telegraphy, telephony, radio, radar and television ; papermaking and printing ; gas manufacture. Department 5—Aeronautics and Sailing Ships : aircraft, balloons and airships ; aero engines and aircraft instruments ; sailing ships, small craft, and harbours and docks ; illumination ; agricultural implements and machinery. Department 6—Motive Power and Industries : wind and water power, stationary engines and turbines ; mechanical power transmission ; civil engineering, water supply, bridges, lifting appliances ; weighing and measuring ; hand and machine tools ; textile machinery ; fire-fighting appliances. Department 7—Astronomy and Geophysics : astronomy and mathematics and related instruments ; seismology ; geophysical prospecting ; geodesy, surveying and gravity measurements ; meteorology and atmospheric electricity ; terrestrial magnetism and navigation ; oceanography and tidal phenomena. Among the notable exhibits are apparatus and documents devised and used by great leaders in the fields of science—Priestley, Dalton and Ramsay in chemistry ; Herschel in astronomy ; Babbage's calculating machines in mathematics ; Faraday and Kelvin in electricity ; Aston, Lawrence, Cockcroft and Walton in atomic physics ; Hooke in microscopy ; Fox Talbot in photography ; and many others. On the engineering and industrial side are beam engines by James Watt ; the pioneer high-pressure engine of Trevithick ; Parson's first turbine ; Hedley's Puffin, Billy locomotive of 1813, and Stephenson's Rocket of 1829 ; a Lilienthal glider, a copy of the Wright aeroplane and the first jet-propelled aeroplane ; the engine of the P.S. Comet of 1812 ; the 14th century Wells Cathedral clock ; etc. An important feature of the Museum is its Children's Gallery, which was opened in 1931. It is designed as an introduction, in a simple and attractive form, to the more mature collections : dioramas trace the evolution of transport by land, sea and air, and the development of street lighting, interior lighting and systems of communication. Other exhibits demonstrate mechanical forces, optical and physical phenomena, the measurement of time, applications of animal, wind and water power, evolution of the ship, etc. Many of the exhibits may be worked by the children ; a small cinema, seating about 70, is included. Science Library, Imperial Institute Road, S.W. 7. A department of the Science Museum. Open Monday to Saturday, 10 to 5.50. Closed on Good Friday, Christmas Day, Sundays and Bank Holidays. Admission Free. Deputy : L. M. Payne, F.L.A. Scope : Original collection was based on the library of Thomas Linacre, who founded the college in 1518. Has subsequently been enriched by gifts from William Gilbert, from Dr. Holsbosch, whose bequest in 1629 amounted to 680 books, and from William Harvey, who gave not only books but a museum in which to house them. The number of books in the library may well have been nearing 2,000 ; six years later the 1666 fire destroyed all but 140 vols. In 1688, the library was greatly augmented by gift of the Marquis of Dorchester, of 3,200 books. From the outset no attempt was made to define the scope of the library, although in the Harveian Statute which was formed in 1656, there is a clause recommending books on geometry, physics, mechanics, travel and exploration as suitable additions to the library. It was not until 19th century when Matthew Baillie gave all his medical, chemical and anatomical books to the college that much attention seems to have been given to the development of the medical section of the library. The acquisition in 1921 of the library of Dr. Lloyd Roberts, the most notable gift of recent years, comprising some 1,800 books, incl. 50 incunabula and over 300 books printed in the 16th century, represented an addition of considerable value for those interested in medical history. To-day, the college holds 40,000 printed books, 600 MSS., a small collection of autograph letters, and the H.M. Barlow collection of bookplates of doctors and medical institutions ; and from the manner of its growth the library contains many books of historic moment on both medical and non-medical subjects. Catalogues published. Coop.: (Aslib.), N.C.L. Library is open to Fellows, Members and Licentiates of the College, and to bona fide research workers at the Harveian Librarian's discretion. SCIENCE LIBRARY, SCIENCE MUSEUM, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W. 7. Keeper : H. T. Pledge, B.A. This national library is especially devoted to pure and applied science. The Library was originally founded in 1857 as the Educational Library of the South Kensington Museum. In 1883 it was established as the Science Library. The aim of the Library is to make as complete as possible a collection of scientific and technical literature, both English and foreign, to render the material available to research workers in the reading room, and by lending the publications to approved scientific research organisations. The Library contains probably the finest existing collection of scientific and technical periodicals, some 20,000 in all, current and non-current. Information concerning the 8,500 current periodicals is to be found in the "Handlist of Short Titles of Current Periodicals in the Science Library," seventh edition, 1953.

There are over 390,000 volumes in the Library. The author and subject catalogues are maintained on cards and kept up to date; the latter is classified minutely by the Universal Decimal Classification. The mimeographed "Weekly List of Accessions" is classified according to the same system. The information service is based on the subject catalogue and an exceptionally extensive collection of bibliographies on all branches of pure and applied sciences. The service is available for the assistance of readers and for the supply of bibliographies of special subjects on request. These bibliographies are subsequently issued in mimeographed form in the "Science Library Bibliographical Series." In addition to the reference facilities available in the Library and the loans service to Government Departments, Universities, approved research institutions and industrial organisations, a photocopying service is also provided. Application for photocopies must be made on special requisition forms which can be purchased on application. Special permission necessary. Hours: 10 a.m. to 5.50 p.m., except Sun. and Bank Holidays.

ROYAL BOTANIC GARDENS LIBRARY, Kew, Richmond. Libn.: H. S. Marshall, F.L.A. Controlled by the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries. Scope : Specially intended to assist in the routine work of the establishment and in investigating questions of botanical interest. Fd.: 1853, by a gift of the books of Dr. W. A. Bromfield, amongst which were many fine copies of the works of older authors. The large and valuable collection of botanical books of Mr. George Bentham was presented by him, with his herbarium in 1854, and in 1866 a large selection from the botanical library of Sir William J. Hooker, and his herbarium, was purchased by the government. These formed the nucleus of the present library. All branches of botany have been considered, and to some extent horticulture, forestry and agriculture. It has been specially its aim to acquire literature relating to systematic and economic botany. There is a considerable collection of herbals, including several incunabula, the more important works on fossil plants, a large number of good general and special text-books, and a comprehensive series of floras. There are 1,500 works on travel containing botanical information. 2,000 bound per., 800 current incl. all important botanical journals. Departmental libraries : at the gardens, specialising in horticulture ; at Museums, on economic botany. Good collection of maps and charts, 500 portraits of botanists and about 150,000 sheets of original paintings, drawings, prints, photographs or other illustrations of plants. Preparation of supplements to Index Kewensis. Books lent to government departments only. Not open to the public. Researchers require special permission from the Director. Stock : 50,000, 2,000 bound per., 800 current per.

UNIVERSITY MUSEUM. Fd. 1860. The museum comprises a very large number of specialised teaching and research laboratories, each self-administering under a Professor, but answerable in certain broad issues only, to a board of the Delegates appointed by the University. The administration of the exhibition building is one of the duties of the delegates, through their Secretary, but the exhibited collections remain the property of the Departments devoted to their respective subjects, and their care and arrangements are in the hands of the Departmental staffs. The collections are to be regarded as auxiliary to the teaching and research activities of the Department. The delegates and each Department receive annually a grant from the University; this is augmented slightly by visitors' fees. The Museum proper is open to the public from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on weekdays. Admission is free to members of the University and certain other persons; otherwise a fee of 6d. is charged between 10 a.m. and 1 p.m.; between 1 and 4 p.m., and on public holidays, no charge is made. The number of visitors averages 9,800 a year. The exhibited collections illustrate zoology and comparative anatomy, geology and palaeontology, mineralogy and crystallography, and entomology, together with the important Pitt Rivers Museum of theology and primitive (but not classical) archaeology. The Radcliffe (Science) Library adjoins the Museum, but is now administered as a department of the Bodlean Library. The Museum Departments have small specialised libraries for their own use. There is no general catalogue of the exhibits. All departments submit an annual report and accessions list to the governing body of the University. The present Secretary to the Delegates is Dr. S. G. P. Plant, B.Sc., M.A., D.Phil., who is a University Demonstrator in Chemistry.

ASSISTANCE TO READERS IN LENDING LIBRARIES

by D. J. FOSKETT, B.A., F.L.A.

"Mr. Foskett gives us food for much thought, and offers no less than a blue-print for an improved public lending library service. A general improvement on lines such as these is bound to come—is indeed long overdue. The reading of Mr. Foskett's book will contribute in no small measure to bringing it about."

—The Assistant Librarian.

"Mr. Foskett writes persuasively and provocatively; overtly dogmatic in places, he jolts librarians into new thought."

—Library Association Record.

"Written by a man with a public library training who is now engaged in industrial librarianship, it describes an approach to our mutual task, and organisation and methods whereby to perform it, succinctly, clearly and convincingly."—The Librarian.

AN INTRODUCTION TO PUBLIC LIBRARIANSHIP

by E. V. CORBETT, F.L.A.

—Library Association Record.

"Mr. Corbett's book cannot but be beneficial to young students."—Library World.

"We warmly recommend Mr. Corbett's Introduction to Public Librarianship to all our readers."

Professional Books

ASSISTANCE TO READERS IN LENDING LIBRARIES

by D. J. FOSKETT, B.A., F.L.A.

"Mr. Foskett gives us food for much thought, and offers no less than a blue-print for an improved public lending library service. A general improvement on lines such as these is bound to come—is indeed long overdue. The reading of Mr. Foskett's book will contribute in no small measure to bringing it about."

—The Assistant Librarian.

"Mr. Foskett writes persuasively and provocatively; overtly dogmatic in places, he jolts librarians into new thought."

—Library Association Record.

"Written by a man with a public library training who is now engaged in industrial librarianship, it describes an approach to our mutual task, and organisation and methods whereby to perform it, succinctly, clearly and convincingly."—The Librarian.

AN INTRODUCTION TO PUBLIC LIBRARIANSHIP

by E. V. CORBETT, F.L.A.

—Library Association Record.

"Mr. Corbett's book cannot but be beneficial to young students."—Library World.

"We warmly recommend Mr. Corbett's Introduction to Public Librarianship to all our readers."

—Journal of the Library Association of Ireland.

SPECIMEN COPIES ON REQUEST

CONTAINS a wealth of topical information, news, articles and features of interest to all who handle books.

The author-title index to new books published gives size, price, date of publication, publisher, etc.

Forthcoming books due within the next seven days clearly indicated in the same index.

This index is re-collated monthly for easy reference.

The Spring, Autumn and Winter numbers provide a unique guide to books due for publication within the next six months, in a form which makes these issues invaluable for constant reference.

This advance information, obtained direct from the publishers, is carefully classified and annotated in one Subject Index.

Every title listed is cross-referenced in an AUTHOR/TITLE INDEX. These issues 'look ahead' six months and are in use for a year.

LIBRARIES

Library of the Directorate of Antiquities, The Department of Antiquities, Baghdad.

Librarian : Gurgis Awad.

Approximately 26,500 volumes, English, French, German and Arabic, dealing with all phases of the history of Iraq.

Library of the Higher Teachers' Training College, Baghdad.

Librarian : Mr. C. E. E. H. Saunders.

In course of rearrangement under expert guidance of Mr. Saunders employed through UNESCO.

Library of the College of Arts and Science, Baghdad.

The Arts and Science Libraries, housed separately, together contain approximately 11,000 volumes.

Library of the Royal Faculty of Medicine, Baghdad.

Librarian : Sayid Abid Nissan.

Largely English and American publications.

The College of Law, of Engineering, of Agriculture and of Commerce, each possess libraries in the process of being built up and in respect of their various subjects are the leading libraries in Iraq.

ART GALLERIES

The Directorate of Antiquities purchases paintings by contemporary Iraqi artists and by British artists whose work is occasionally exhibited in Baghdad. The small collection of paintings so formed was previously exhibited in a building at Southgate, Baghdad, which has recently been demolished.

MUSEUMS

The Iraq Museum, Ma'mum Street, Baghdad.

Curator : Taha Bakr.

Mesopotamian antiquities of Pre-Islamic eras. Present accommodation is limited and temporary pending the erection of a large new building.

The Iraq National History Museum, Northgate, Baghdad.

Curator : Bashir Allousi.

A small recently initiated collection more representative in birds than in mammals.

The Abbasid Palace, The Arab Museum and The Museum of Arts are ancient monuments in which are housed photographs and a small number of antiquities rather than museums proper—their collections will presumably, in due course, be built up into museums as funds become available. At Southgate, Baghdad, used to be housed the so-called Museum of Ethnography, which contained in one building a collection of relics of King Faisal I and in a second a collection of the national costumes of Iraq—the building has recently been demolished but the collections have not yet been housed elsewhere.

Mosul Museum, Mosul.

Recently opened and not yet completed : antiquities from Nimrud and Hatra.

American Library Directory

The 20th triennial revision of this important reference work brings together the latest information about personnel, budgets, book stocks, book funds, circulation, special collections, etc. It provides data on public, college, university, professional, federal and special libraries—about 16,963 in all—plus library schools, library organizations and clubs, state and provincial agencies, library periodicals, U.S. bibliographical centers. The listings are arranged geographically by state and city, and there is an extensive subject index to special collections and special libraries. The special libraries listed include business, industrial, scientific, research, law and governmental. Improved symbols make it fast and easy to find libraries by type and size.

Price £8 : 2 : 6 net postpaid.

American Art Directory

This comprehensive 1952 revision provides complete lists of the museums, art schools, and art associations of the U.S.A., Canada and Latin America, with names of officials and data on special collections and exhibitions, size of library if any, membership, dues, etc. Art departments of college and public libraries are included. Also included are lists of art magazines, museum publications, newspapers carrying art notes, open and travelling exhibitions. All entries are fully indexed both by name and by interest—e.g., archaeology, architecture, art teachers' associations, etc. Sponsored by the American Federation of Arts. 38th edition, 1952. Next revision, spring 1955.
